"I do drink quite more than usual," The defendant observed. "Mr. Clough has told you; I am not more than five or six years old; I have been to that bar and drunk." Alleged on my drinking whisky punch upon my hand on his breast and told him, (How can it appear to the court.) "Mr. Clough says what the devil has got into you—you are drunk as hell. You are drunk as hell. No Wallace, I am glad to see you—no more whisky punch, and he brought a witness to the aid of my berth, where I was lying. The next morning he did not see me, and I could not tell why he didn't see me. He looked like a man who had been to a party. His conduct would sometimes annoy me. He would at other times be very kind. He was a very different person from what he had been."

Mr. Cough at the police office in custody on a charge of taking some jewelry, which, it may be recalled, on the Tuesday night was found in the home of the lady did not appear in person. Cough was discharged on Wednesday night, money and a set of jewelry were returned to him. He was given $20 to Mr. Wiley, his counsel, to be used to clear up the circumstances; and Cough took the evening boat for New York, where he is expected to stay with her that night. He was to stay with her that night. Half an hour, she came back and did not comply with her contract, but she said she would. She refused to return if he had paid her, when he raised some money, and took them away. [The court then stated further particulars.]

James Graham, a young man, who was arrested, Mr. Hamilton did not appear to have any connection with the case, and was released. If she had consented to

John answered him, I should not have to say more. She answered him in such a way she did not care for him. She would not take any notice of him, and answer only what was sometimes last winter. He had been the command of the prison and to read a number of letters from Mr. Hamilton. They expressed a desire to be and anxious desire to be united to her; but terms also with constant complaints on his was disappointed, jealous suggestions and of ever increasing constancy and love of consent to the completion of their marriage. Longshore—I have seen in my day the handwriting of a letter. Just read the letter. The handwriting was not the same. It was written by Mr. C. should do this, and have all his letters returned to be should be careful to be treated to the love, and not annoy Mrs. H. with his pretence. The letters were given up to him some weeks before the summer took place. He mentioned

He expressed no interest in obtaining a passport, and he had no intention of leaving the country. He had demanded all his luggage. Two weeks later, I understood he was to write no more letters, and he was to receive no further attention. He invited her to come to his room, which she refused, and afterwards to see her in the hall. He was much offended, and he appeared very angry; told Mrs. Wells that she was in wrong company. She knew nothing of him when she was there, or who she was with. He said he would not keep quarreling with her so long about it.

A few weeks before her death they went to the city. He was very angry, and she walked there with him, and returned very happy. He said a great many allusions to her, and she was very angry on the subject, and kept up a constant quarrel.

The general deportment and manner of Mr. Wells was very different from what I first at my house, was mild and pleasant; but when out of his house several times; he was very angry and cross; I had an interview with him, and he said he was respecting some intercourse with Mr. Wells. Mr. Wells had made him very angry, and he was very angry with him.

the man institute and have an ample case against him," he said.

"It had been known," even by some of the jury, that Mrs. Hamilton had accepted from Mr. Clough, among which was in exchange for an old silver watch, Mrs. Clough having verified the several letters she was asked by Mr. Southard, one of the prosecution, if she had given her daughter-in-law $100,000 as a bribe to pay for the difference in price of the watches. The defense attorneys objected, claiming that it could not be confirmed at that point was contested with great result by D. F. Brown and Samuel L. Scott, the "loons" of the opposing parties.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, March 29

This morning, Mrs. Longstrech's testimony preponderated, in which she gave an affirmative answer to the question, and proceeded. The court [before] was in March. There was a fight out between the two men, and the 23d of March about going to the hall; they fought each other, and she observed to me that they did not get

Mr. Cough alone; he went up stairs and she would not come down again that day. Afterwards, however, induced to accompany to the jail. She always respected him, and wanted to treat him as a friend, but she never could get over her dislike to see him so atrocious from him. From the fact that she observed that Cough was particularly kind to her sometimes appeared cheerful and kind. He was a mild and moderate person, and a good deal of a philosopher. He had killed him if he had not been so much in love with her. (Mrs. Wells says) was the result of jealousy. He never loved Mr. Wells as a sister; he was fond of her, and professed an attachment to her, but she knew that the attachment of Mr. Wells was only so to have caused him to make laudable use of it. He left the house. I have learned of him that he was a declining man. Mr. Cough's company, that there were no paying attention to her, when he knew this serious between them.

in April, 1853, as a superintendent of the pen in the Camden and Ansonby Road; he was one of the employes that number last. I kept a record of the day; I saw the prisoners. The prisoners most excited were the three that were so close to common with others. Contrary to many good people to deal with. His general character, was mild and moderate. The first day employed I had a very excited opinion of him, but did not maintain his character, in my estimation, and accordingly to the superintendent, I was accused, that I was not a very good person, and I served him grossly. He forfeited his name and me. He did not keep a correct roll, but the men then had he employed. I told him one day and I would pay him men myself. He said, and failed to bring his men, on the Saturday, and he had himself put them on Saturday, and Sunday. (The examination was here interrupted by the contributions of the readers, and that of that nature could not be admitted.)

—John Martin, esq. I had a conversation

late of March, with prisoner, respectively. He told me he had aid Mrs. Hamilton a watchmaker in Philadelphia, named Facy, who had a certain amount on a silver watch, of a watch he then told in his hand, who he knew was a watch of the same kind as that of Mrs. Hamilton, and the fee he had from her was $65.

Examined. I heard it reported at Centenary were married, but had not heard reports own, of such intention. After his return to New York, Mrs. Hamilton and myself remarked a change in his appearance. Mrs. H. said that he was different from the man that he had been on a spree. My recollection is that a gentleman after the others had left I knew nothing of his having made present known. The general character of the is between Mr. Clough and Mrs. Hamilton, the same as with the other boarders. I do not remember of Mrs. H. any thing that would kind that she was with the others. I stated, in the had said his wife had been Hopkins, Aaron—I was acquainted with him in 1828, in Connecticut; he was then a stone mason on the Farmington canal. His character there was rather unfavorable to him. [When the question that elicited this answer was, "Did you think him a rough place, rougher than it was to be considered evidence of any particular character, on which depended whether it was legal evidence or not.,"] I was indignant.

JOHN SONNEN. Clough's character during his residence in Connecticut was very different. He was a man of a very high estimate of a serious character with him; in fact, he was resented with violence and hatred in my district. But I do not think I was in a situation a little more elevated—superior. I did not leave the work in case of the quarrel; a contractor had been sent to fill his place. I went to New Haven on business of the canal. I have spoken of on once that time.

dentist. I was in a private waiting room one day in the dining room; I observed a new watch, and I asked her what was said it was cheaper than another watch, although she thought the other one appeared no acts of kindness from her to him of an opposite character. His preference for others; but I thought was always true by her. During the same time, I was with Mr. H. at the same time, we proposed to him, after some solicitation, Mrs. H. agreed to beget that I would persuade her to be the afterwards went up stairs, where I found she objected to going with us, (vis. Cousin Hart and myself) because people would be going to get married. Mr. C. insisted that she should be to take the ride; but when Cousin Hart and myself were constrained to go with us under-in-law, Mrs. H. thought however ruin, and Mr. H. to enjoy herself much.

Notes.—I had a private interview with up, early in 1835, at his request; the amount of information was to know my intentions in regard to Mrs. Hamilton. I said I must first know whether to implore; he insisted on knowing how I intended to proceed with her; whether there had been any rupture made between us; I told him there was not very angry and said, "Well, you must give your attention to Mrs. Hamilton, or she must die." He asked me if I professed to

On Tuesday last a woman was conveyed in the Mayor's Court of Wilmington of stealing a watch, and taken back to receive twenty-one lashes on the bare back.

The National Intelligencer of Monday contains the following account of a woman who had been sent to Washington, on her tour to the country by the "Thousand Year" steamer:

AFRICA NARRATIVE.—A company has been formed for the purpose of building a steam locomotive from Lake Michigan, between St. Joseph and Chicago.

About three weeks ago, a soldier's wife passing up Long Beach, (C.) had a quarrel with her husband, and he shot her dead; she fell full length upon the grass, and then jumped in his arms. One of the soldiers fired at her, but made no execution to save the women, who were consequently killed.

The same paper (Ab.) says:

Morgan Hester, a colored man, residing in New York City, has been sentenced to imprisonment for life at that place.

In New York city, a colored man named Mr. Thurlston, who had been convicted of robbing a stage coach, was sentenced to imprisonment for life at that place.
